Dear resident

We are seeking your views on the Mayor's plan to cut dangerous air pollution in your area by expanding the Ultra Low Emission Zone (ULEZ).

We are consulting on the next stage of the Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan's plans to help tackle London's lethal air pollution.

Air pollution in London is a public health crisis. Recent health data has shown 7.9 million Londoners - nearly 95 per cent of the population – live in areas exceeding the World Health Organization air quality guidelines by more than 50 per cent. This polluted air contributes to thousands of early deaths each year in London, and impacts our health over the course of our lives, leading to decreased lung function in our children, and greater risk of dementia and stroke when we get older. 438 schools alone in the capital are in areas exceeding legal air quality levels.

As part of his commitment to help clean up London's dangerously polluted air, from 8 April 2019 the Mayor is introducing the Ultra Low Emission Zone (ULEZ) in central London, replacing the T-Charge with an even tighter emissions standard for diesel vehicles. The ULEZ will operate 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year. Further information about the ULEZ is available on our website tfl.gov.uk/ultra-low-emission-zone.

The Mayor is now proposing to extend the ULEZ's tighter emissions standards to the whole of London from October 2020 for heavy vehicles (buses, coaches, lorries and other specialist vehicles) only and for cars, vans and motorcycles up to, but not including, the North and South Circular Roads from October 2021.

The ULEZ will reduce harmful emissions in London and help clean up our dangerously polluted air. It is part of a package of action the Mayor is taking to improve London's air quality, including significantly increasing funding spent on tackling air quality over the next five years and cleaning up our bus fleet.

Please visit our website tfl.gov.uk/airquality-consultation for further information about our proposals and to provide us with your views by completing our online questionnaire.
